

27 March 2010

TO: Anderson Cooper
anderson.cooper@turner.com

Mr. Cooper:

How dare you say you're laying the data out on the table so people can decide for themselves who's lying and who's telling the truth, and then put that under the title...

You think anyone believes you haven't made up your mind? But you're too much of a coward to come right out and say so. Because you're afraid of all the holes and errors in your "investigation" that a legal action could expose. And correctly so.

...

How can you do a whole section on how bad bullies are and then five minutes later turn around and act like one yourself?

And you're not just standing by passively and watching it, you're actually doing it, you are completely culpable.

As you said, those who witness bullying are afraid to speak up because they don't want to become targets.

Yep. Seen that.

But you're too late. So many people know who we really are now, they either don't bother to watch your show – yup, we saw the ratings – or they see how arrogant and self-serving you really are.

S.B.